The Top Signs That You Might Have The Wrong Company Culture

You might have the wrong company culture if...

On the first day of training the new hires...the trainer says "dang I drew the short straw it must suck to be you."

Or when they come back from the first break, the trainer says "that was a good break we only lost 5 people this time."

If you notice claw or hash marks on the cubical.

If the last candidate still has fresh chalk outline marks.

If you have your people sign their end release form at the same time as the onboarding or I-9 Forms.

If the record for the position is less than 90 days.

If the employees say it's like a vacuum and always sucks.

If the employees say that it is only slightly stressful, yet everyone is bald from pulling their hair out...

If you constantly say that this next step will only hurt a bit.

If you pride yourself that your work site hasn't followed safety precautions for years!

If during the interview the interviewer says that you are overqualified and they are young enough to still be drooling.

If you have to have a list with the cops on the first line or pictures of previous employees found listed in the post office.

If your HR manager starts the interview with "How long were you in for?"

And the final way to tell that you might have the wrong culture or employees working at your business:

If the local news has just left with film about a violent crime or people leaving in strait jackets, then You might have the wrong workplace culture!
